

Marine University in Area Urged by Cortum

Don Cortum, Republican candidate for Congress in the 17th District today called for a marine-fishing university in the San Pedro area to train people in modern fishery science, conditions of fish populations, new techniques of locating and catching fish, and new means of processing and distributing this wealth of the sea.

He also called for careful consideration of the best system for the international law of the sea that will bring the best conditions for American fishermen and for continued international consultation with Russia, Peru, Japan, and other countries for proper conservation agreements to save those resources for the fishing industry of the future.

our coasts is growing and will present serious problems if not met with practical means. We imported $600 million worth of fishery products last year which counted for a good part of our foreign exchange deficit."

CORTUM ALSO pointed out his recommendations to improve the competitive position of the fisherman. He would provide support for fishermen getting modern vessels using American labor and capital at prices competitive with their foreign competitors, and would press for quicker means of getting new results from science and technology in the hands of those who can profitably use it—the fisherman.

CORTUM ASKED for a reappraisal of the fishing industry and the fish processing industry. He called them essential parts of the economy and said it is important that America becomes as nearly self-sufficient as possible in its fish supply. Labor and management working with government must save the industry, he said.

"In 1945, San Pedro boasted a fishing fleet of 150 boats. Today, only 30 of these boats represent the fleet. The industry's collection of experienced captains, fishermen, and seasoned experts has been largely dissipated.

Law in Action

Many a murder mystery has been written about the killer who later marries the key witness to try to prevent her later testimony against him.

Our Penal Code says that neither the husband nor wife can testify against the other in a criminal case without the other's consent.

The rule had its origin in the early idea that a man and wife were really one single entity. If the wife were called to testify against her husband it was in effect forcing the man to testify against himself—to incriminate himself. Today we recognize the husband and wife as separate legal entities.

The rule also aims to preserve marital harmony. This is still the main reason for the rule. But the rule does not apply where the harmony is lost or beyond preservation. Thus when the husband has beaten his wife or the children, the wife can testify against him without his consent. Or if the husband has schemed to steal her property, the law allows the wife to testify against her husband without his consent.

IN A RECENT case Bill Badd was found guilty of robbing and later killing his victim. It was then up to the jury to decide whether Bill should be given a life sentence or death. In setting the penalty the jury looks at the circumstances of the crime, the defendant's background as it may affect the penalty.

The district attorney called Mrs. Badd. She said that Bill was often violent, often beat her, and on one occasion almost killed her.

When Bill got the death sentence, he appealed and claimed that the jury should not have heard Mrs. Badd without his consent. The Court ruled that her testimony was admissible, the violence Mrs. Badd told about could in no way preserve marital harmony.

The law also protects some "confidential communications" between husband and wife. Neither may disclose family secrets in court when one party objects.

SOME OF THE old limitations upon husband and wife have been lost of late. For example, the law now permits lawsuits between husband and wife for injuries done to the other on purpose or through negligence.
